"THE TEMPLE WITH A HEART"

"Her (His) value is far beyond rubies". -Proverbs Chapter 31

One morning last month, I was scanning the channels and I came upon Toy Story 3. The common themes of the Toy Story series were there: loyalty, bravery, animated toys and humor, but this time there was something unique about this number. In it the toys are given away twice, the first time, anonymously, as a group of unnamed toys, that is, and the second time, each introduced by name and with a short story about each to a little girl known by Andy, their owner.

I am a participant in thrift shop sales, yard sales, estate sales, etc. My only regret when I make my purchases is that I don't know the history behind the object. Especially at estate sales, I don't know what the value of the object was to the person whose estate it was. I know what I paid in terms of brass and silver and gold, but the intrinsic or spiritual value of a religious object remains a mystery to me. "My mother loved this piece", could be a ploy on the part of the salesperson or not. I won't know. All I know is the piece looks interesting to me and the price is right.

On a basic level, we must tell the story of our "valuables" to our children and our grandchildren and, if blessed, to our great grandchildren and everyone else in between. Those toys were worth their weight in gold to Andy, if only because of the hours of valuable play time they gave him. So, valuables, doesn't mean silver, gold and fine china. It means history. Let me further explain. When Mina and I were engaged, my father sent us a Lenox Seder plate as a gift. During the 1994 earthquake it fell and broke. Mina and I were heartbroken, but interestingly enough, at a teachers' conference, one week later at Sinai Temple, I saw another. I bought it. Mina said, "But it's not the same". I said, "Physically, yes, but the story of this Seder plate adds to the family history. It is the Seder plate that was bought to replace the Seder plate that was sent by Pop for our engagement." We have used that plate many times and each

How do you measure success? Is success a relationship? Is success power? Is it money? Fame? Clothes? Cars? Family? Religion? Success may be looked upon by you on how you help others succeed. It could be all of these or none of these. There is no right answer on what success is and how to measure it.

Some people measure success with money. But if you are not happy in what you do, how can you really be true to yourself and say that you are successful? We set goals for ourselves. Sometimes they may not be realistic. There is no magic to the key to success. We must strive to look at things positively. I know, sometimes that is hard to do. If we do not like something, we must not wallow in self pity. We must make a difference. Don't compare yourself to the next person. You really only see them on the surface. Focus on what you can change. It all starts internally.

Aerosmith has a quote in one of their songs, 'Life is a journey, not a destination'. We try to make the best of situations. Things are not always planned the way we want them to be. We need to enjoy life. An example would be, we know that we are going to retire someday. We put money away for retirement. Money is tight because of that. In this example, are we really happy in life? You may have plans. Plans are good to have, but they are ever changing.

As summer draws to a close, and High Holidays are around the corner, remember to be true to yourself. Be proud of yourself. Embrace your family. –President Steve Abrams time it reminds us of my father, the 1994 earthquake and how blessed we are to have one and gone through the other.

In the Hebrew month of Elul, coming up in the middle of August and lasting until Rosh Hashanah, we are to examine ourselves to help us become better people. The word Elul itself has two Ls, in Hebrew, the letter Lamed, which almost always has to do with instruction, Lomad (learn) and mLamed (teach). Let us not only teach each other about our external valuables, but let us teach each other about our greatest valuable, ourselves.

Recently, Joshua agreed to drive to Davis a 1600cc Harley-Davidson motorcycle in a trailer behind his truck. When I heard about the trip, I wasn't about to let him go through the San Joaquin Valley in 100+ degree temperatures alone. He was reluctant because he thought I was going to spend time with him and his friends in Davis. No, I was just along to see transport of the Harley and then I was coming home by plane. Joshua and I share a lot in common from SCUBA Diving to Martial arts to, of course, a love for our people, but it still surprises him that I like some of his music and a fun surprise for me, that he likes oldies. In the truck that was reaffirmed through several conversations about music. Other conversations showed how much we are similar, but not the same. On the trip we got to appreciate each other and our passionate likes and dislikes. During Elul, please, take time to teach those you value about all your "valuables", including your most valuable possession, your "soul", the part of you that houses your likes and your dislikes, your loves and your hates, your excitements and your boredoms. Then you will be able to learn how valuable those around you are because by seeing what they hold as valuable you will see what place in their heart they keep you, their most prized, valuable person and, of course, what place in your heart of hearts they hold.

B'ahava,
Rabbi Mark

We'll do all the shopping and arranging so you can enjoy the evening. The charge for this has been reduced to $50.00.
